

Present Perfect

CEFR B1

Lesson Pack · summary, worksheet & answer key

Quick answer

The present perfect (have/has + past participle) connects the past with now. Use it for:

- 1 Experiences at an unspecified time — I've been to Rome.
- 2 Recent actions with a result now — She's lost her keys.
- 3 Situations that started in the past and continue — We've lived here since 2020.

Never use it with finished-time expressions like yesterday or in 2019 — use the past simple instead.

At a glance

Form	Structure	Example
Affirmative	subject + have/has + past participle	She has finished her homework.
Negative	subject + haven't/hasn't + past participle	They haven't arrived yet.
Question	Have/Has + subject + past participle?	Have you eaten?

Learning objectives

- Can form affirmative, negative and interrogative present perfect sentences with regular and irregular participles (CEFR B1).
- Can distinguish present perfect from past simple in contexts with and without finished-time markers.
- Can use since/for, just/already/yet and ever/never appropriately.

Correct answers with explanations · for the teacher

1. B. has lived — A situation that started in the past (2019) and continues now takes the present perfect, with 'since' + starting point.
2. B. saw — With a finished-time expression like 'yesterday', English always uses the past simple.
3. C. Have / tried — Life-experience questions use 'Have + subject + ever + past participle'.
4. B. for — 'For' + a period of time (ten years). 'Since' would need a starting point.
5. B. gone — 'Gone' = he went and is still there. 'Been' would mean he has already returned.
6. D. haven't finished — Negative present perfect + 'yet' at the end: 'They haven't finished their homework yet.'
7. A. since — 'Since' can be followed by a clause that marks the starting point: 'since I left university'.
8. B. I have lived here since 2020. — Started in the past + continues now = present perfect with 'since' + starting point.
9. A. has lost — The action is finished but the result matters now (she can't open the door) — classic present perfect.
10. A. I have never eaten paella before. — 'The first time I have eaten paella' = no previous experience = 'I have never eaten paella before (now)'.
